Fantasy RPG fans certainly hope for a new RPG title to appear in the near future. In the case of Stellaris Online, it has now been announced that PS4/PC owners will be able to join in on the fun from an entirely new perspective when the game is released in 2020.

Stellaris Online is confirmed to be released next year on both the PS4 and PC platforms, with particular emphasis on access to PlayStation 4 owners. The good news for PS4 fans, according to sources, is that even though it is the multiplayer in the game that is most related to the existing Star Wars Battlefront 2, the player base for multiplayer game play with other players is not expected to increase thanks to the PS4's controller.

Despite the restriction from user interface aspects to be the same on each platform, it is expected that gamers will enjoy the mission tasks they perform, and such a release could help the Stellaris Online game find a much broader audience than it currently has. Because the characters and action feel like they carry an incredible new style, the expectations are high that the multiplayer game play will be something exclusive to the PS4.
